

The Temper Trap - Sweet Disposition (Music Video) Comparing both..

In this music video they use bright lights throughout their video. This makes the music video stand out as they use bold colours such as gold. They also show the band in the video to show the audience what they look like.

This music video does not show a narrative. This music video is a calm, peaceful to make the audience feel happy. The way they show the band in this music video is that they come in in green screen and created them looking like they are in space.

Comparing this video to my video, I would like to produce this video different as I would not have humour in it and the video would not show the band. It would only tell a narrative with a small amount of people in the video. This would not be set with bright lights like shown in the real music video. It would be set in a bedroom showing pictures from the past, while staring at the pictures the girl will be packing her bags as she is about to leave her home. Then it will show her getting the car driving off and her looking back. She the looking around the car and on the motorway then everything speeds up. The set is going to be different in my video to the set of the real music video as the real video is set in a studio whereas I am going to have the set in a room, outside and in a car.

This song is a good way to show emotion as it has many meanings to it. This song makes the audience feel like what is going to happen next. When you put a narrative with this song, it makes it interesting for the audience to watch but in this music video they do not show a narrative but they still make the video good by showing the band and the lights.

In The temper trap's music video it shows a image of triangles with the band in them and they repeat over and also using the band repeating them doing the same movement. Using repeated movements can get boring as it shows the viewers what they have already seen. Using repeated shapes in a music videos can make the audience go off focus. The camera shots they used while doing this is close up shots.

In my music video I am going to use a hand held camera which will make it look real. I am also going to use a tripod but a only a small amount. I am also going to use the contrast as colour and not in black or white as I want to make the video look real.
